

REMARKS

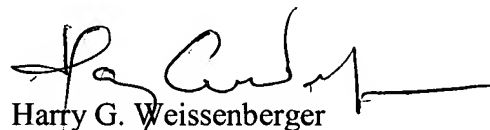

Claims 25-29 are in the case.

This new set of claims is being presented in an attempt to better define the functionality and interrelationships of the invention's elements.

The gist of the invention is the removable frame of release material which makes it possible to handle the form after removal of the label, without exposing any adhesive to touch until the form is ready to be attached to a carton. At the same time, the retaining of the portion of release material over the location of the removed label makes possible the creation of a pouch and the simultaneous provision of visible indicia thereon without smearing the indicia with adhesive. Neither McKillip nor Kelly suggest that advantageous frame construction. In Kelly, the release liner is not coextensive with the main label and therefore cannot prevent premature exposure of the adhesive. McKillip only shows adhesive labels removable from a backing, and a document portion separable from a label portion in a form. Applicant respectfully submits that the teachings of Kelly, even if they could logically be combined with those of McKillip (which Applicant disputes), would still not result in Applicant's claimed construction.

A Notice of Allowance is respectfully solicited.

Respectfully submitted,
